What do our RESIDENTS SAY

Karma Lakelands is a place that I love. It is secure with all required amenities available in-house with a friendly Karma team in place to take care of our needs. Going forward in this new world order, there is no better environment i can think of other than Karma Lakelands for being our home.

Ashok Jaidka
Former MD India- Hellmann Worldwide Logistics

We have spent the last two months in quarantine at our home at Karma Lakelands - and have felt so privileged to be "confined" in this lush green paradise. For golfers like myself, there is the huge added bonus of a world class eco friendly 9 hole golf course. A wonderful club with terrific dining, swimming etc.

Living at Karma I feel the same as Emperor Jahangir felt when he visited Kashmir - "if ever there was a heaven on earth, it is this, it is this, it is this.

Gautam Nair
MD - Matrix Clothing

It has been very peaceful, relaxing and safe staying at Karma Lakelands during the lockdown times.

David Owen
MD - Winterhalter India

Living in Karma Lakelands has been blissful, especially amid the lockdown. The lush greens and sense of space is uplifting. Living here is like being one with nature - reading, waking up to bird song and encountering Peacocks, Neelgais, foxes on my evening walks, even Fireflies on our post dinner walks

Kamp Karma

We at Karma Lakelands decided to go off-track with our new venture Kamp Karma. Designed with subliminal undertones of nature and poise, these premium tents provide an ideal getaway to both, the Allocentric or the Psychocentric.

There are five unique tents, all with a diverse range of themes, that converge together effortlessly to create a robust 'Kamp' atmosphere. The Kamp site is further complimented by the expansive ecosystem of Karma Lakelands. The ecstatic feeling of a boundless environment is what we aim to provide to each traveller who chooses to take the road less travelled. Get ready to be enthralled by the varied and vivid tent themes at Kamp Karma.

Primrose and Promises
Inspired by the British vistas, a floral decor that evokes the feelings of promises made.

Blue and Blissful
A serene space with a decor inspired by calm hues of blues to sooth your senses.

Wild and Peace
An artistically done premium tent inspired by the energy of the wildlife yet the peaceful harmony they maintain.

Pause and Applause
Take a moment to pause and consider what you've accomplished and give yourself a pat on the back and much needed break in this well curated premium tent.

Bounty and Beautiful
The decor inspired by the abundance of nature.

Roots of Karma

Sanjay Yadav

A root, in essence of the word, is an underlying organ of a larger organism, which despite its non appearance, remains one of the most vital aspect of the larger body. With respect to our organisation, a perfect representation of a root of Karma Lakelands is Sanjay Yadav. A golf caddy by profession, he has been a radiant figurehead of pure hard work and determination.

Having worked in the company for almost a decade, Sanjay has seen both, the golf course and the company grow under his watchful eye. When asked about his feelings about his work, he expressed that he enjoys the exercise he gets to do on a daily basis and even went on to say that he works while feeling that Karma Lakelands is his home and he wants many golfers to visit and enjoy here. This very sense of belonging comes naturally to many within the organisation.

While Sanjay has encountered various interesting incidents during his time at Karma, one particular story always stands out. What seemed like a regular day at work, suddenly took a drastic turn. Sanjay's expatriate client accidentally drove his golf cart into one of the lakes of the golf course. When he realised what had happened, he didn't wait a second and rushed towards the lake. At first sight, he remembers, he could only see the cart, not the golfer. Matters got more complex when the client's golfing parter and subordinate, in disbelief and alarm, jumped impulsively into the lake to save his boss. It then unfolded that both the submerged golfers were complete non swimmers. Without an iota of hesitation, Sanjay jumped into the deep lake and pulled out both his clients with great difficulty. A serious disaster was averted!!

The golf operations team took a Rs. 5000 deposit towards the golf cart repairs with an undertaking that the golfer would make good on the deficit post the repair of the cart. However, in the next few hours, the company President took a decision to waive off the liabilities of the damaged cart from the guests and furthermore rewarded Sanjay handsomely for his act of courage.

Throughout the years, Sanjay remains an epitome of work ethic and sincerity. He has even helped train his colleagues to optimum potential. A true asset and an absolute root, Mr Sanjay Yadav. Thank you!

Roots of Karma is our endeavour to acknowledge the people behind Karma Lakelands and share their stories with you. It is a campaign that recognises and appreciates the hard work our team tirelessly puts in every day to deliver nothing but the best to our guests. Our team members are truly the roots of Karma Lakelands who hold us firm as we embark on the journey of growth.

Our Wanderlust led us to Hospitality

Ajay Ahuja

Director , Karma Chalets

Having stayed at the cute and quaint one room B & Bs in the interiors of Scotland & Wales, to the very up-market private game park Mala Mala in South Africa, we began to appreciate different aspects of what made a hotel memorable. We became aware of how different was the experience when we stayed at five-star luxury hotels. It was the attention to small details that impressed us and that was the time when we first started wondering - 'what would we do if we had a hotel of our own?"

I was in Coimbatore about ten years ago attending a program of Isha Yoga, and Sadhguru asked the congregation - "Which was the happiest day in your life?" Breaking away from all the usual answers, I elicited the most enthusiastic response when I mentioned that mine was the day I married Anu. While we compliment each other in many ways, the one thing that binds us together is our love for travel. And we have been doing it for past 30 years!

Road travel was the easiest mode to get out of the house. We were travelling to locations in interiors of Rajasthan long before 'domestic' tourism became fashionable. During these getaways, one of our favourite spots was the little known but exotic Taj Ramgarh Lodge near Jaipur. This perhaps was the beginning of our exploration of all kinds of properties – from old, heritage havelis and palaces to the new and fashionable hotels.

Having stayed at the cute and quaint one room B & Bs in the interiors of Scotland & Wales, to the very up-market private game park Mala Mala in South Africa, we became aware of the different aspects of what made a hotel memorable. We started noticing how very different was the experience when we stayed at five-star luxury hotels. It was the attention to small details that impressed us and that was the time when we first started wondering - 'what would we do if we had a hotel of our own?"

As time went by, an opportunity presented itself for us to have our own place. Karma Chalets in Karma Lakelands opened its doors in November 2016. We had 35 rooms available with us. None in the family had had any formal training - but hospitality certainly flowed, thick and strong, in our veins. And we were finally stepping into the world of running a hotel!

The uppermost desire in each one of us was to provide a place of warmth. Anu worked extensively alongside the interior designers to incorporate her own special homely touches. Moving from traditional paintings on the walls, we decided to replace them with photographs of our travels. The result? Each and every room will transport you to a different part of the world. The little personal touches are evident everywhere - from the handpicked flowers in the gardens, the cushions in rooms, the welcome drink, our logo, DND signs, message boards and key rings designed by the children - the attention to detail and the boutique touches are everywhere.

In 2018, we added our Cafe & Kraft Kitchen, aptly named - 'Under the Neem' - to compliment the stay with delectable food. As one walks along the meandering path through the property today, there is a sense of peace and tranquility. The staff are warm natured and willing to please. The greenery with the birds and the bees, is all pervading. All making for a welcome change from the urban, concrete jungle not too far away. Hammocks invite you to relax, slow down and pick up a book. A small village-style 'Mandir' beckons you to say a prayer of thanks. You have come to a magical and unique place that is indeed a 'home away from home.'

The Lockdown Revelations

Paradise Gained

It is 0615 am, we exit our home and turn right onto Bougainvillea Avenue, only a few steps past RD and Kailash's home, the Bougainvillea are coming into full bloom. They're paler this year – COVID maybe ? Perhaps they will get deeper as the sun gets stronger. But the variety of color is amazing – orange, pink, red, whites, all resplendent in a beautiful palette. It is so beautiful that we decide not to turn at the fifth hole but carry on down the road to enjoy the last stretch which is always the most colorful. It does not disappoint – they say bougainvillea blooms in misery, so this section must be the most water starved because they are in full bloom !

We reach the end of the Drive and decide to make a right. Another slice of paradise – the Amaltas on both sides of the road are in full bloom and there is a beautiful golden carpet of fallen Amaltas flowers decorating both sides of the road. The trees are bedecked with their golden ornaments all set to embrace the passions of the summer sun. We are too drunk on the beauty around us to observe some movement on the right – and almost walk past.

Some sixth sense makes me focus on the clearing on the right – and there is a peacock practicing his seduction in full plumage. He twirls a couple of times for us and then stalks away regally.

We decide to get adventurous and take a right along an abandoned path going into the Karma jungle. Some movement in the bushes diagonally ahead – and yes, it is the swishing tails of a small herd of Nilgai sheltering in a grove of trees. They shy away as we approach and we are apologetic that we disturbed them.

We emerge onto the main road and after a few steps, hop over the checkpost on the right to enter the golf course on the tee box of the 7th hole. And there it is – one of the most beautiful sights at Karma Lakelands – the giant lotus ponds. We've never seen lotus leaves this big – and since it's a cloudy morning and the sun not up yet, the flowers are still semi closed. An amazing sight, enhanced by the variety of bird life around the pond.

We continue towards the 7th green and watch a golfer hit his (third?) shot onto the green – I lose sight of the ball but miraculously, a white dot appears on the lush green surface, rolling steadfastly towards the pin. We're enjoying the walk so much and decide to extend it – turn left and walk along the silver oaks towards the 8th green.

The sky is cloudy and the bare tree on the 8th green looks almost defiantly against the dark, cloudy sky.

We make a U turn and walk back towards the 9th hole. There's a Kingfisher perched on the top of the tall tree on the left of the cart path – and a coucal scurries away.

The first hole is getting crowded with Saturday morning golfers impatient to tee off. We regretfully retrace our steps, pausing only to admire the beautiful fountains in full flow

0700 am and we are back home.What an absolutely glorious way to start the day !!

From a psychologist at Karma Center

Ecotherapy in the times of Covid 19

Based on the principles of Eco-psychological philosophy, which posits that disconnection from our natural surroundings forms the basis of various mental health conditions, ecotherapy has emerged as a set of interventions that aim to improve psychological functioning through the use of greenspace. Especially with all the repercussions Covid-19 has brought in, it has also delivered unusual environmental benefits such as cleaner air, lower carbon emissions, and a respite for wildlife.

Modern-day living is a multifaceted collection of ever-evolving technology & social media, wherein a constant indulgence with gadgets leads us into a sensory overload mode. Furthermore, with the ongoing crisis, the pandemic now poses at us, we are finding ourselves dependent on technology & virtual aids more than ever. In such a scenario, where overstimulation has become the norm & breathing clean air a privilege, reality often seems dull & boring, causing our mental health to pay the price.

A simple remedy to this 21st century epidemic of overstimulation & deteriorating mental health exists all around us. Based on the principles of Eco-psychological philosophy, which posits that disconnection from our natural surroundings forms the basis of various mental health conditions, ecotherapy has emerged as a set of interventions that aim to improve psychological functioning through the use of greenspace. Especially with all the repercussions Covid-19 has brought in, it has also delivered unusual environmental benefits such as cleaner air, lower carbon emissions, and a respite for wildlife. More so, during the coronavirus lockdown, people have started finding their refuge in nature. They've developed their own versions of ecotherapy and practicing it frequently in varied ways, such as by riding bikes, gardening, walking, nature writing, and horticulture.

The benefits of nature are innumerable. Even research has demonstrated that there is a kernel of truth to the popular cultural refrain that going to a park can help overcome blues & stress. Interaction with green spaces is associated with improved concentration & reduction in anxiety (Chalquist, 2007; Newton, 2007). Credible research has indicated that patients who had a view of nature from their window recovered faster from gall bladder surgery (Summers & Vivian, 2018).

Incorporating ecotherapeutic techniques such as animal-assisted therapy, horticulture & nature-oriented guided imagery to your treatment plan can prove beneficial to the outcome of therapy. The basic idea is that the power of nature places the individual amidst something much bigger than them, causing them to become more connected & aware of their surroundings & question their existence beyond themselves. Moreover, our engagement with the environment causes no side effects such as restlessness, loss of appetite & dizziness which are common results of psychiatric drugs. It has been found that noticing nature is related to pro-environmental behavior, feelings of kinship, and healing; also for those who are dealing with loss and loneliness or anxieties of this global pandemic.

However, it would be remiss to claim that eco-therapy can be a stay alone strategy of managing our mental health. Some individuals would continue to need more conventional evidence-based treatment/ management. For these individuals, eco-therapy can become a refreshing supplement.

Taking into consideration the importance & value of this therapeutic approach, Karma Lakelands provides the perfect location for the practice of eco-therapy under the guidance & supervision from expert mental health professionals of Karma Center for Counselling & Wellbeing with their digital detox program - "Shift Control" which follows all the appropriate social distancing measures & WHO safety guidelines. The program is focused on giving individuals an avenue to reconnect with the benefits of nature, tune out the digital noise & focus on mental, emotional & physical wellbeing amidst lush & luxurious villas and gentle guidance of highly qualified mental health professionals. You get the perfect blend of mental health and engaging in a plethora of sports and activities. You may want to opt-in with your family, friends, or even work colleagues or for corporate retreats as the program caters to different age groups ensuring a holistic experience.

Having worked with various corporates for mental health & wellbeing interventions, KCCW found that individuals associated with corporates are highly susceptible to stress & anxiety-related concerns due to their high-pressured jobs & reported improvement in productivity, concentration, adequate work-life balance, emotional regulation & overall resilience on receiving eco-therapy interventions along with our other therapeutic approaches.

This location with its ecological and sustainable activities/practices like water harvesting, organic agro initiatives, solar energy utilisation, over a 100000 litres of recycled water for irrigation purpose, no honking (the guards respond to sight not sound), no plastic, eco-bricks, treetop development becomes a perfect amalgamation of nature & mental health needs. One could practice refreshing mindfulness walks, Art-therapy workshops, guided imagery, mindfulness relaxation or simple bird watching amidst this truly enriching environment promising to leave you rejuvenated.

A few hacks into digital detoxification from our mental health experts:

1) Limit your screen time especially in the evenings as it prepares your brain for a good night's sleep.
2) Reduce the brightness while using your phone or use the blue light filter.
3) Replace your habit of checking the phone when you wake up with any relaxation exercise like meditation or mindfulness body scan.
4) Restrict digital usage by setting aside time slots for replying to emails, messages or returning calls.
5) Set aside some part of the day when you refrain from using any screens & replace it with time in nature.

Thus, ecotherapy, also known as nature therapy, acts as an easy, cost-effective way of managing stress, anxiety, and depression. Now more than ever, there is a need to connect with our surroundings. Our environment is acting like an undiscovered holiday destination. This is a time to move to a new sense of consciousness.

When Shit Hit the Fan, Crores of Investment Went 5 Feet Under !!

Ashwani Khurana
President, Karma Lakelands

Fun facts and experiences of our STP for water recycling:

Upon insistence of Phil Ryan, our golf course designer and Director Karma Lakelands & six years of search and follow-up with next door neighbors, the NSG (National Security Guards) who had a huge surplus of sewage from their thousand plus acres' campus, we finally got them to agree to supply part of their surplus sewage to us. Significant investment went into this environmental initiative in the year 2017 as this otherwise wasted resource would finally get treated by us and used for irrigation and landscaping of our golf course.

A 400KLD Capacity treatment plant was commissioned with full fanfare, but the celebrations and good feeling on achievement of this initiative lasted just seven days after the opening. On this eventful night, the operator of the STP, who had recently got married, suddenly decided to make a romantic visit to his newly-wedded wife. Perhaps in a great hurry, while he did shut down all the machines that pumped the treated water into the irrigation lake, he forgot to shut off the inlet pump that brought in the sewage from the NSG to our plant This ill-treated  sewage, that was flowing on gravity, first filled up the tanks in the treatment room that is located in the basement, and then started to over-flow. By morning, crores of rupees of investment in equipment, was drowned in five feet of muck. As chance would have it, the proposed alarm system meant to enable timely intervention, if flooding began, had been missed out - both by the installation Agency as well as the esteemed Project Manager!

People close to me know of my resilience - especially during the toughest of times. None of them realized how desperately passionate I was to see this water conservation effort see the light of day and how bitterly I wept alone at my house in Goa when I heard that the plant had drowned!!

Interestingly, some six months later, by the time the plant was re-commissioned, the NSG refused the supplies. They retracted on their commitment and resumed to do what they knew best. Now, they were back to their old practice of removing sludge from their grey water. Rather than properly treating and using it, or allowing its use for irrigation purpose, they started to fill up a dirty water lake in their compound which to date continues polluting the air, earth and the water-table underground. No amount of follow-up has got them to handle their waste water properly or supply it to us. We, as good eco-responsible citizens, have filed complaints to the Environmental agencies and brought it to the notice of the Prime Minister's Office as well, as all the wrong practices continue to happen in total disregard of his Swachh Bharat (Clean India) ideas.

We, at Karma Lakelands however, have finally been able to supplement internal generation by sourcing re-cycled water from the neighborhood GMDA (Gurgaon Municipal Development Authority) and keep the approx. 200,000 Litres a day irrigation requirement fulfilled.

All are finally happy as the key purpose of saving ground water from extraction for use in irrigation is saved and the water-table in the region has stabilized from dropping. At some points in the approx. 300 acres campus, it has even risen up on account of rainwater harvesting that happens in the entire campus using water from landscapes and building roof tops.

 Ill treated Sewage is as a result of a shortcut process of treatment wherein no proper treatment other than sludge removal is done. This actually makes the subsequent treatment even more complex as the bacterial component has to be compensated by adding cow dung instead.*
